Graduate Programs

The German Department also provides programs for doctoral and Magister candidates. The prerequisite for a doctoral or Magister program is an appropriate qualification as well as the achievement of the criteria of the Institute of Social Science.

It requires a sufficient number of points in the ALES and YDS examination, grade average of the current diploma and the average rating of an oral and written entrance examination.

The content of the Literary studies includes all written records of the defined German language from middle ages until the 20th century.

The linguistic department treats the elaboration of different linguistic theories and their application to oral and written data.

Both Programs offer specific knowledge and competence for the students.

*"Literatur is immortality of language."
